This Improvement consists in making regulating raives to open with a rapidly increasing rail to dopening, by increasing the width of the opening made in the valve—or by accelerating the opening motion of the or-timary valves in use—or by combining increased width of opening, with accelerated valve motion. My patent valve and Governors are so arranged as to give the weightness of the infoormance of the patent of the raine and the oxed amount of a practice necessary to counter we: that resistance; and from the apperture, by the addition of equal arounts of resistance, nowith-standing that the aution of the governor is continually decreasing in its effects. authors of equal arounds of registrate, notwith standing that the action of the governor is continually decreasing in its efforts on a valves combined with governors. As heretofore used. And arthis effects can be produced by many different mechanical devices, (appurently not similar, but really indentical with any improvement,) by which infringers have imposed upout the public. I therefore caution and request all pursons interested, to examine carefully all if the application of this truth or brinciple, first discovered and applied by me, is not involved in their arrangements; and thereby prevent a fraud upon the purchaser and inventor, both of which are at present much annoyed by their plratical depredations. Causs of the Difficulty.—All San Francisco has been on the qui rive for the past two days in expectancy of a duel which was to have taken place between the Hon. David C. Broderick, U. S. Senator from California, and the Hon. David S. Terry, Judge of the Supreme Court of Cahfornia. The causes of this beiligerent, hostile demonstration we have already given our readers. It grew out of mutual off-nsive remarks made of one another by each of the parties—Judge Terry having originated the vituperative language in the late Democratic Convention, and Mr. Broderick taking occasion to rejoin, not long after, in the International Hotel in this city, in the presence of one of Judge Terry's friends, at that time some belligerent language passatthat time some belligerent language passad between this person and Mr. Broderick, and published correspondence in relation to the matter was directly after set before the public in the various newspapers. It was a momentous occasion. Here were two of the most prominent men in California, about to stake their lives against each other in deadly combat. One or the other, if not both, it was well known, must fall.—

How many hopes, fears and inward ejaculations arose from those anxious groups. Upon the fate of one at least, perhaps, hung the political aspect of the State for years to come; and with it the power and influence, and gift of offices, and to it were allied the flore strict of party, the hates, loves, friendships and emnities of thousands. On Sunday evening it was known beyond question that a hostile meeting would take place, and hundreds, who seemed to take delight in such scenes, were on the alert to find out the place. Buggles and carriages were engaged over night, and at early dawn not a vehicle of any kind could be obtained for love or money at the livery stables. The terms of the challenge were said to be, to fight at five paces, with pistols.

The duel ground—arrest of the parties.

The ground selected for the encounter, as we have already said, was in a small valley on Davis' Rauch. On arriving there the officers found a small collection of people awaiting the appearance of the duelists, who had not yet arrived. The original place of meeting having been changed (when it was found that the police were on the track) from San Francisco to San Matso County, over the line.

The growd constantly augmented, and at light and agreed after that.

During this time the two principals maintained their positions and listened with composite to these details. Judge Terry atond with his head thrown slightly back, looking toward his autagonist. Mr. Broderick stoud erect, but his head trather down; he pulled the rim of his hat down about his eyes to shirt them from the light.

The positions of the two were somewhat different. Judge Terry maintaining that of

The rumor of Mr. Brokerick's "nervousness" is utterly false, and is pased upon his occasional mo-tiyns to ovserve those prescribed positions of hand and arm which his seconds had enseven o'clack, Mr. Coulton pronounced the words—

There was an interval between the two reports. At that instant Mr. D. was observed to clap his left hand to the right side of his breast, when it was seen that he was wounded. He reeled showly to the left, and before his seconds could reach him he fell to the ground, with his right leg doubled under him, and still grasping the weapon. A day or two subsequent to the above speech, Mr. Broderick, while at breakfast at the International Hotel, happened to be seated near David W. Perley, a devoted friend of Judge Terry. Broderick, from reading a report of the speech, broke out in violent language, which was decined grossly insulting towards Judge Terry, delivered with bitter emphasis, and directly addressed to Mr. Perley, who soon int-fered in behalf of his absent friend. The Cost of Gas. At a recent public meeting in Glasgow, the the price of gas in that city, some interesting statements were made as to the price at which it is furnished in various British cities. The present cost in Glasgow is live shillings sterling per thousand cubic feet—$1.21—and it was demanded by the needing that it should be reduced to three shillings six pence per thousand feet, or about 85 cents.—It was stated that the prices in 1846 compand to the prices in the company of the collars with present prices in the pared as follows with present prices in the three principal cities:

London, per 1,000 feet, 6: to 9:, or about $1.70 to 2:18, hiverpool, " 4.6d. " 109. Uissgow, " 58. 58. 1559. London, per 1,000 feet, 42., or about 97 cents. Liverpool, " 32.9d. " 91 Ginsgow. " 6.5x. "$1.21

Thus, while a great reduction in the price of gas has been made at London since 1846, and a considerable change at Liverpool, none whatever has occurred at Glasgow, and the public of that city, therefore, rightfully claim attention to their representations at the hands of the gas companies.

The coal used at Glasgow is cannel, and, in elaborate calculation at the cost of manustruction of works, gas may be furnished at less than fifty cents the thousand sec. All the great works constructed there as well as here, are thus encumbered and with unprofitably spent capital, which must be earned by the current use of gas, unless old works are wholly abandoned and a strong point against the purchase by that city of the company or hand and whom his exercise for Judge plane upon him. The bearing of Judge Terry, though he assumed a more practised and motionless attitude, was not one jot more that of an iron-nerved man than was that of Mr. Brokerick. At a quarter before the possible release from burdens should not be made a perpetual charge for the fature. made a perpetual charge for the future.

We here pay nearly double the highest price paid for gas, as the following compari-

> It is obvious that we might improve the condition of our gas supply, and reduce the very bills our large cities pay for it, without devising any new gas to burn; but if any means whatever can be employed to light us at half the rates we now pay for this indis-pensable necessity, let us have light upon it, and have light cheap.—Philadelphia North

A TERRIBLE REVENGE. CHAPTER L Or our pleasant party at The Elms, last Christmas, Kate O'Hara was the beauty, far away. I remember our little silence of ad-nitation as she came into the drawing-room, just before dinner was announced, (for your prima donna does not care to enter until the house is full.) and the great sensation her arrival made, though she could not have approached more quietly or meetly if she had been the cat. Half a dozen young ladies vho, before her advent, looked pretty enough. who, before her advent, tooked pretty enough, suddenly became quite uninteresting to a corresponding number of bachelors, and even we married gentlemen paused awhite in our talk of shorthorns to steal an admiring glance. We had resumed our bovine conversation, and were diverging, if I remember aright, in the direction of the Prince Consideration of the Prince Cons gort's pigs, when my wife came up to me, and whispered: "That's little Kato O'Hara!" Why did my cheek glow and my heart throb? Why did the name of one whom I had not seen since she was a little child recall at once the crowning happiness and chief confusion of my life? confusion of my life?

confusion of my life?

It shall be told, terribly, anon.

The six bachelors "entered themselves" immediately for "the O'Hara stakes," as one of them was subsequently pleased to designate the dreaming of Love's young dream; and two of them—a middy and an undergraduate—got the start, and made the runging at the most weblies race Large 200. uing at the most reckless pace I ever saw. Indeed, the sailor proposed on the third evening, and was declined with such good natured cheerfulness that he seemed to be rather pleased than otherwise; whereas, the collegian, who was of a poetical turn, took his refusal, the day following, very seriously to heart, and passed the remaining part of his visit in sorrow and the shrubberies. Two other competitors, unattached, (except to Kate,) were disposed of at an archery ball; and the reach the law hat went Charley North. and the race then lay between Charley North cote, captain of hussars, and Philip Lee, curate.
It was a grand set-to-"hands up." I can

It was a grand set-to—'hands up,'' I can tell you. If Charley had the handsomest face, and, playing with a builet pendant from his watch-chain, but which had previously resided in his leg, could talk of the time "when I was in the Crimea," Philip had the more intellectual expression, and had won at Oxford the under-graduate's "blue ribbon"—the Newgate prize for English verse. Charley, it is true, when we were skating on the lake, produced upon the ice such wondrous "eagles" as Audubon never dreamed of; but he was, on the other hand, the first to own, when the frost broke up, that, "in a really good thing with hounds, there was not one of them could catch the parson." For Philip, though he did not hunt in his own parish, could "go like a bird" out of it, whenever he could get a mount.

CHAPTER II.

On the night before our party separated, we had a grand performance of charades, in the last of these, the Rev. Mr. Les had won immense applause as a ferocious captain of buiditi, acting with the greatest enthusiam, and having composed for himself, with the co-operation of a cork, a pair of moustachies, which rivalled Charley's. We were to appear at supper in our charade costumes, and were waiting the announcement of that repear at supper in our characte costumes, and were waiting the announcement of that refection, when I noticed an extraordinary phenomenon which caused me instantly and carnestly to whisper to Miss O'Hara, "I have something to say to you. Come at once."

We passed unnoticed from the crowded drawing room into the library, still littered with our theatrical properties. Setzing a dagger, and assuming a characteristic scowl, (I was attired as a brigand's assistant,) I bade her "Listen!" And she, (I see her now in her pretty hat and cloak, for she had represented in our last scene a young English countess stopped by the robbers,) ever ready for burlesqua and mitth—as she supposed all this to be—made answer, solemnly—"Say on." "Twelve years ago, Catherine O'Hara, I wooed and won in the home of your childhood the lady who is now my wife. On a hood the lady who is now my wife. On a sweet summer's eve, I told my love, sitting under an accaia, and upon a garden seat, the property of your respected sire. Hard by, you, then a little child, was swinging in a swing. Those same long silken I rish lashes drooped over those deep blue eyes, and we never dreamed that you took notice of us, sealing, in the usual manner, our mutual vows of love. Judge, then, how intense our agony, how complete and awful our abasement, when, as we rejoined the feative throng for coffee, you cried aloud for all to hear:

""Oh, mamma! those two did so kisseach other, when I was swinging in the elm!"

"For twelveyeurs, Kate O'Hara, the memory of that humiliation has troubled my indignant soul; but, at last, I am avenged—

lignant soul; but, at last, I am avenged-

I held before her one of the hand looking glasses which lay on the table near, and she was preparing to say something in the dra-matic style, as she snatched it from me with the proud air of a tragedy queen, when her eye caught the reflection of her face, and in a moment that fair countenance was blanched and pale, and she stood, with her head drooping, speechless. For upon her lip, reader, she saw, as I had seen, the certain sign and trace that, in some obscure corner behind the scenes, the race had been decided for the "O Hara Stakes," and that the Brigand Lee had

"Kate," I said, "you cannot be vexed with me, for I congratulate you with all my heart. May you be as happy, dear girl, with our friend the Robber as 'those two' have been happy, whom you saw 'so kissing one another' from beneath those silken lashes as you sat swinging in the elm."
